Knowledge management is the practice of adding value to information by capturing tacit knowledge and converting it into explicit knowledge. Ontologies can represent existing knowledge from a contextualized domain. In our research domain about learning, the ontologies allow to model different aspects of knowledge management systems for higher education, where knowledge transfer is considered as a service to people. This presentation shows a model ant its technological architecture for knowledge management in higher education through ontologies.

Contact: jacqueline.signorini@univ-paris8.fr